MATTER What is the cartoonist trying to say to the viewer?
The cartoonist created an example of yellow journalism to incite an emotional reaction to the attack of the USS Maine. It exhibits the power of the newspapers during this time period to share information with readers in the United States. The demonising view of the Spanish was used in order to gain support for entering a war to defend American honour and retaliate for the death of soldiers.

STEP 3: Write a summary explaining what the cartoonist is arguing using evidence OR discuss with a partner your conclusions.

This cartoon, originally published in Judge magazine, exhibits one emotional response to the sinking of the U.S.S. Maine during the Spanish American War. In 1898, the United States entered into a war with Spain, but it was fought in the Philippines and in Cuba where the United States proved the power of its navy. The image of the ape holding a bloody sword in the center of the picture represents a demonizing view of the Spanish to show how monstrous it was to sink a United States ship. The vibrant blood dripping to the ground is brighter than the pale red of the United States flag being trampled on by "the Spanish Brute," which tries to represent the Spanish as unnecessarily violent. As an example of yellow journalism, this cartoon is used to encourage Americans to support entering a war with the Spanish. The cartoonist's message is very clear based on the title and central image of the monstrous character standing over the cemetery of dead American soldiers.
